Add weight to campaign

THE decision not to replace the Metropolitan Police's Coach Advisory Service. alias Sgt Ian Fray, is one which the capital may live to regret.

Sgt Fray and his predecessor Bob Pilbeam have not only kept vital information flowing to operators at home and abroad, helped produce the London Coach Parks map, warned of impending demonstrations and roadworks and been the link between drivers and The Knowledge, they have been ambassadors for the London coaching community.

In the opinion of a great many operators, it is vital that this role is preserved, whether within the police force, London Tourist Board or by the Government's proposed new Greater London authority. But if nothing is said - and said now - in protest, operators throughout the country have no central focus for inquiries and complaints.

This magazine will be campaigning for a new Mr Coach for London. If you do nothing else this weekend, add your letter to the pile which will be landing on our doorstep, and you'll give real weight to the campaign.

Going it alone is ill-advised

BUSK'S drive for improved standards of safety in school transport has moved up a gear. First it was seat belts - now it's staggered start times for educational establishments as part of a package of measures that could revolutionise home-to-school transport.

Long-term tenders are proposed and these, together with some of the other proposals, will be applauded by the coach and bus industry because there has long been a strong lobby among operators to achieve such objectives.

However, once again BUSK has failed to consult with operators, CPT, Government or the schools. It is a misguided strategy that will only generate resentment.

At the risk of repeating what has been said in this column before, experience has taught seasoned campaigners that the best way to ensure success is to work with the industry rather than against it. We don't want another seatbelt debacle.

Coach lifeline axed

By Mark Williams

LONDON'S Coach Advisory Service has been cut in Metropolitan Police's restructuring programme.

When current advisor, Sgt Ian Fray, retires mid-September (page 55, this issue) he will not be replaced. But the move has brought an angry response from operators and from Sgt Fray himself, who say it will be a recipe for congestion.

"I am disappointed and saddened that the Met is not to continue the post," said Sgt Fray. "I had no junior in the office to train, so the Coach Advisory Service was only me. Now, there is nobody with a full understanding of the issues, and nobody to take the complaints, nobody to advise on routes and parking, and perhaps most important of all, nobody to collate information on major disruption, like marches and football matches."

Sgt Fray said the current London coach parking map may be the last, and operators who need to know details of disruptive demonstrations and marches in the capital will have to phone local police stations along their route.

The axing of the post brought a furious reaction from Steve Telling, md of Tellings Golden Miller and vice-chairman of the London Tourist Coach Operators' Association: "Nobody realises how much we value Ian's department. It is a desperately needed service.

"Who will give out information now? Take football, for example. London must have more clubs for its area than any part of Britain. Who is going to ensure coaches get in and out of grounds without getting caught in, or becoming part of, the congestion?"

London Coaches (Kent) coach hire manager Keith Payne said he used the service twice a week: "Typical information I'd need would be road closures, like those in London for Princess Diana's funeral this weekend, and finding the best layover and parking for unusually big coach movements" said Mr Payne.

"Not to replace him would be a tragedy for coaching and a tragedy for London's residents."

The Confederation of Passenger Transport has written to Home Office Minister Alun Michael stressing the importance of a centralised co-ordinating officer for coaches: "It is a very strong and important function in London," said a spokesman for CPT.

"We understand that the Metropolitan Police are hoping to tell us soon what is to be done to replace the Coach Advisory Service," said a spokesman for London Tourist Board. "We feel very strongly that his service should be preserved, and it will be a sad day for London if that does not happen."

Mainline steps on the gas in latest trial for hard-worked demonstrator

DAF's LPG bus on trial for Quality Partnership

MAINLINE is trialling DAF's LPG bus from late September to October as it gears up to strike Quality Partnership deals.

The Sheffield-based group is putting the vehicle - a lowfloor DAF SB220 with Northern Counties Paladin body - on to 'real' routes against its diesel counterparts to assess performance and fuel economy before making bids for Quality Partnerships in the Yorkshipe city.

"Suppliers Hughes DAF and Shell are working with us to show the benefits of this new generation of vehicles," said a Mainline spokesman. "In particular, these high-quality buses can enhance the opportunities available to local businesses and councils to develop Quality Partnerships. Examples already exist of 40% increases in travel on corridors where these vehicles have been introduced, giving exceptional benefit to the local economy."

He said that other Mainline territory such as Rotherham had traffic and pollution problems which could be solved with LPG buses.

Hughes DAF's LPG bus is in almost constant use in trails with operators, said the Cleckheaton-based dealer, owned by Cowie Group: "Orders have been slow in coming, and are often hung up on availability of grants for gas buses," said a Hughes DAF spokesman.

Check on children

AN incident in which a fiveyear-old was locked in a coach after falling asleep has brought a warning to school contract operators.

Samantha Lester of Desford curled up on the back seat of the Pam's Coaches vehicle on the way home from school, and was shut into the depot when the driver went home. She was eventually found by a council worker sent to the depot to check her whereabouts.

"The driver for every contract should check every vehicle, not for children, but for lost property and vandalism, among other things," said council transport officer Dave Smith. "In our experience, this check is almost invariably done, but the driver said afterwards that he had been anxious to report some minor accident damage so the vehicle could be prepared."

Mr Smith said a reminder was being sent to contractors to remind them of this duty, and that anything similar, though unlikely, would be taken very seriously.

Victory in bus driver licence row

LEARNER PCV DRIVERS who have failed the practical can re-take the test after three days, says the Driving Standards Agency.

The change of heart is being hailed a victory by many training agencies, who said the extra delay could dissuade still more drivers from joining the industry and add unnecessary cost to training without producing any safety gains.

Concerted pressure from the industry, and trade associations, over the proposals for a ten-day delay (CBW 26 July) has had the effect of reducing the gap as a special dispensation to vocational driving tests, including HGV tests.

The DSA has announced same-day theory test results which can be obtained for no extra cost at 22 of its test sites in the IIK

INSIDE TRANSIT THIS WEEK

Richard Branson is looking to float his Virgin rail, which has 15-year franchises for both the operation of Cross Country Trains and the West Coast Mainline. The franchises clearly give Virgin the ingredients for a national rail operation but its commitments to OPRAF mean it has to enjoy spectacular growth if its stands any chance of making profits, and this against a background of infrastructure renewal. An ambitious new plan to build a high-speed railway along the central reservations of the M1 and M6 motorways has been proposed by a team of Liverpool based academics. Pie in the sky or a blue print to the future? London's Underground is facing a new strike threat as the RMP ballots its members of a 2.7 % pay offer already accepted by ASLEF and TSSA. The ballot on September 2 recommends 12 and 24 hour tube strikes but fresh talks might avoid this.

Blazefield, the 400 vehicle bus operating group with operation in Yorkshire, Cambridgeshire, London and Hertfordshire, has dramatically improved profits over the last 12 months. We have full details.

No rock and roll on this midibus

OPTARE says its new, integral midibus (page 8, this issue) will provide a ride free of the pitch and roll associated with narrow axles and large front and rear overhangs.

Axles on the as yet unnamed bus have been specially widened - to 2360 mm over the wheels - to meet the body profile. The front axle is placed well forward, and the rear as close to the driveline as possible giving 2265 mm overhang.

Passenger appeal will also be enhanced by low noise levels thanks to the modern Mercedes-Benz engine, and a 490 mm aisle width, and despite the 2.65 metre height, Optare promises a roomy feel to the vehicle.

Passenger enjoyment should be further enhanced by deep windows - floor-towaist height is just 870 mm. The first example of the new midibus, which Optare will only say will be priced 'competitively', will be shown at Coach and Bus 97 at the NEC on 9 to 11 October.

Accident 'proof' that seat belts prevent injuries

Two crashes underline coach safety aspects

By Mark Williams

TWO coach crashes in two weeks have proven the strength of the vehicles, and one is being heralded as a demonstration of seat belt safety.

In the first, a duplicate coach being run by Wirralbased EMS Bus and Coach was struck on the M6 by a 38-tonne truck while stationary. The impact demolished the back of the Volvo B10M Paramount 3500 and pushed the coach forward.

But although emergency services expected the worst, even despatching a helicopter ambulance to the scene, passengers sustained only cuts and bruises.

"We've had the belts fitted by Elite Services six months ago," said Nikki Benson, a manager at EMS. "It was dramatic crash and I believe we have the belts to thank for not having any injuries. I now believe seat belts should be fitted to all coaches."

The second accident involved and almost identical coach, run by Warwickshire-based Wainfleet Motor Services, which struck a stationary, brokendown lorry on the A42 in Leicestershire. Although 29 of the 32 passengers were taken to hospital, only two were detained with serious injuries.

According to some reports, the lorry had been obscured by dense smoke at a blind spot in the road. Driver John Cashmore was badly shaken but uninjured, but it is believed that the two casualties still in hospi tal were in the front, near side seats which took mos of the impact.

"Mr Cashmore did remarkably well, and hi reactions almost certainly prevented any fatalities, said manager Keith Wood.

"It's the first serious accident the company has had, he said. "The coach was fit ted with seat belts, but don't think they had an bearing on the low numbe of injuries."

Mr Wood said the coacl is repairable despite exten sive body damage.

It is believed that the couple still recovering in Queen's Medical Centre Nottingham, had lea injuries. A spokesman fo the hospital described their condition as 'comfortable.'

- GLENDA JACKSON has officially launched a throughticketing arrangement between Thamesdown Transport and Great Western Trains. - THE GOVERNMENT has issued a revised guide, London Traffic Management and Parking Guidance for London, for consultation. The new guidelines for London local authorities will replace previous advice compiled in 1992: "We are proposing significant changes from the current guidance on parking controls, the aims for the Red Route network, and the options for development of cycling facilities," said Minister for Transport in London, Glenda Jackson. Integral, rear-engined midibus uses Mercedes-Benz 900 power plant

Introducing Optare's new baby

By Mark Williams

OPTARE has introduced an integral, lowfloor midibus to the market using the principles of its big sister, the Excel, and the appeal of the MetroRider.

The as yet unnamed vehicle, at 8.5 metres or 9.2 metres, plugs a gap between lowfloor body-on-chassis buses such as Dart SLF and chassis-cowls and conversions. It's a full 2.5 metres wide, and uses 'fly-by-wire' technology to reduce downtime.

"Packaging the necessary components within a double decker or full-size single decker is difficult enough," said Optare md Russell Richardson. "In the confines of a smaller vehicle it is so difficult as to put off most makers."

Mr Richardson said Optare's MetroRider experience - 3,000 have been delivered - gave it the impetus to produce a "proper bus" with a 12-year design life and features which, he said, made him confident it is already a winner.

The midibus sees Mercedes-Benz' compact 900 Series engine, used in the Vario, rear-mounted. It is installed with its gearbox and exhaust system on a quick-release 'sledge', allowing an engine change in two hours, with the vehicle ready for work. Low-loss hose couplings derived from military vehicles help speed the task.

Other innovations include

Styling matches curves and lines of integral Excel and MetroRider and all DPTAC recommendations are met multi-plexed dashboard links - which limit high-current wiring, and provide one-minute electronic fault diagnosis. It uses heavy-duty GKN and Albion axles, and full air suspension.

"This is a proper bus with no compromises, despite its small size," said Mr Richardson. "The multiplexed wiring is no great breakthrough - it's already in many cars - but the diagnostics facility will be of substantial benefit to operators, who tell us electrical faults are a major cause of breakdown."

The midibus meets all DPTAC recommendations and will match specifications laid down eventually by the Disability Discrimination Act, says Mr Richardson. In its 8.5-metre form, it will have 33 seats, and 37 in 9.2 metre. But the absence of front wheel arch intrusion leaves plenty of wheelchair space on either side and an adaptable floor area.

The passenger door in either 1100 mm or 1350 mm widths allows free flow of passengers. The driver position is slightly forward of the door, relieving space for passengers alighting.

Step height is 250 mm, with a kneeling option providing further reduction to 180 mm if required. The design has taken ramp fitment into account.

The exterior of the bus is stylish, with a curved screen and bonded windows. As with Excel, all lower panels are instantly removable for replacement or servicing. Optare has opted to blank the rear of the vehicle, with high-level destination display and registration plate to give a useful panel area for advertising or route information.

Under the panelling is a high-grade steel frame structure, corrosion-proofed and serviceable for retreatment for the vehicle's life.

Within the midibus, choice of interior and lighting is the operator's, but extensive mouldings are being provided for ease of cleaning. GVW will be 9400 kg for the 8.5, and 11,000 kg for the 9.5-metre version.

Steering axle is well forward and lowfloor section uncluttered for wheelchair access

and make it better!

The Vario Nouvelle has had a distinguished history. Its predecessor won the Coach Industry Awards', Midicoach of the Year for 1995/6 and was voted winner again by operators for 1996/7.

So what is our recipe for success?

Well, first take a Mercedes Benz 0814D, a vehicle renowned for engineering excellence and quality. The kind of quality that delivers: a 4.25 litre turbo intercooled engine with electronic management typically returning 22 miles per gallon and an expected one million kms lifespan, ZF gearbox, service intervals up to 45,000 kms, all round disc brakes and air suspension to rear.

Then add: air operated swing door, 29 plus courier seating capacity on full 450 mm seats, fixed seats with lap and diagonal belts, reclining seats with lap belts and 3.3 cubic metres of luggage space.

Backed by after market support that is second to none, the result is a Midicoach that's not just better, it's the market leader.

Long-term tendered contracts proposed

BUSK plan for revolution in school transportation

By Mark Williams

PRESSURE group BUSK is asking operators to join a campaign to revolutionise home-to-school

It is proposing adoption of a model scheme which would encourage schools to stagger start times, and local education authorities to introduce tendered contracts of up to 10 years. This, says BUSK, would allow operators to use vehicles more intensely and, with longer contracts, invest in better vehi-

"LEAs will have to appreciate that this could be one way to upgrade schools transport in general, paying the going rate, using fewer vehicles, and giving operators the confidence to buy new or newer vehicles," says BUSK national organiser Pat Harris.

BUSK proposes a meeting between operators, LEAs and schools, before the end of the year, to take its ideas forward: "BUSK sees one of the biggest problems being the attitude of parents and schools to staggered start times," says Mrs Harris.

"To change those attitudes, the right approach has to be found so parents can see the benefit to their children, short and long-term.'

BUSK wants to see the LEAs introduce adult supervision on at least primary school runs, produce an LEA/parent 'contract' making parents directly responsible for their child's actions on vehicles, and issue obligatory bus passes which must be shown for every jour-

Operators would respond to longer contracts with newer or purpose-built vehicles, provide drivers with identity badges and radio or phone links, and train them in basic first aid. Parents would be asked to provide supervision, receive first-aid training, and be provided with personal insurance cover by the "More involvement from all parties concerned can only be a good thing, raising everyone's expectations and underlining shared responsibility, including that of pupils," said Mrs Harris.

The idea brought broad suptioned against several pitfalls.

"Of course, we are keen to anything support which public transport, improves including that to schools," said public affairs director David Watson.

"But we could not officially support any campaign until it had been through full consultation with government departments, professional associations, LEAs and the teachers' professional associations, and had achieved support for its aims.

"I suggest that ten-year contracts may be anti-competitive, and that the notion of coach drivers being called upon to administer first aid is a definite no-no. There are real problems of liability, and of having any direct physical contact between drivers

Siesta Travel is doubling hotel business on the Costas next

anish programme

By William Golden

SIESTA Travel Europe is reporting an increased demand for its northern Spain holiday programme thanks to the successful introduction of its club class coaches.

The night express operator brought the six club class coaches into operation in 1995 and they have helped the Middlesbrough-based company survive the recent slump in the market.

Passengers pay a £7 supplement for club class travel, which is on 62-seat double-deck coaches. Seats have pitches of at least 35 inches and recline to a 45 degree angle.

Siesta Travel also operates a single-deck equivalent hotel class - on coaches that carry 39 passengers.

Managing director Paul Herbert said: "Companies who stuck to the old mentality of running night express services on standard coaches have found they have nothing to attract the customer. At Siesta, we have decided to go it alone and bring in an extra quality of service.

"This year, there has been great demand for both club and hotel class coaches to Spain.'

Siesta Travel's core business to Spain involves holidays in mobile homes and, this year, it has a capacity of 25,000. This may be increased by 10% in 1998, a year which also see Siesta double its hotel capacity to 20,000.

Mr Herbert said: "We have been concentrating on the night express market and now think we have got this about right. Our core business has been mobile home holidays and we could increase capacity next year.

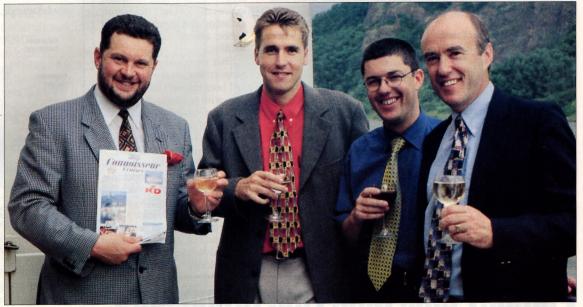

"As a result of concentrating on the mobile home side of the business, we have tended to let the hotel side tick over. We now want to build up the hotel side, which is a much more competitive market. You are up against the big such companies Thompsons and the direct

Next year, Siesta will again operate six club class coaches to Spain but expand its hotel class fleet from two to eight to cope with the extra hotel capacity.

Siesta also sells apartment holidays but capacity has been pegged at 13,000 because of a shortage of quality accommodation.

In addition to the coaching programme, Siesta runs an air tour pro-gramme to Spain from Manchester and Newcastle upon Tyne.

A new programme to Porec on Croatia's Istrian Peninsula is to be launched by Siesta Travel next year.

Rhine time in new wholesale tour programme

BOTEL SERVICES is pushing the boat out next year by teaming up with KD River Cruises to launch Connoisseur

The European programme will feature two Rhine itineraries and a trip along the Moselle. The Rhine itineraries are Cathedrals and Canals, which is a three-night cruise from Strasbourg to Rotterdam; and the two-night Rhinelander, which runs from Cologne to Frankfurt.

The Moselle Explorer is a two-night cruise from Trier to Cologne.

All cabins are en-suite and have radio, telephone and air-conditioning and the cruises are inclusive of full English breakfast, four-course lunch, afternoon tea and four-course dinner. Onboard facilities include a sundeck, observation lounge, bar and dining

All KD ships have nightly entertainment and the packages include a Captain's Welcome and Farewell parties. Shore excursions are also available.

Overnight accommodation in three or four-star hotels in Belgium or Holland can be arranged, or they can be included a part of a longer holiday package.

Christmas coach capacity is increased by Le Shuttle

COACH CAPACITY on Le Shuttle has been increased to meet extra demand from operators in the run-up to Christmas. The space has been made available for them to develop themed packages such as office Christmas parties or Christmas shopping at Cite Europe, which is five minutes from Le Shuttle terminal at Calais.

Paul Cowgill, passenger sales director, said: "Our traffic figures for this year indicate a 10% year-on-year growth, reflecting the tremendous support the industry has shown us. It is very satisfying to be able to reciprocate this support by offering additional space in the final quarter of the year."

Party time at hotel

GET in the party spirit by organising a group visit to the Skiddaw Hotel, in Cumbria, this Christmas. The three-star property in Keswick is offering breaks for £41 per person a night, excluding Saturday nights, and comprises overnight accommodation, full English breakfast and five-course dinner.

The Christmas Party programme includes a disco and games with prizes. At dinner, groups have a menu choice of five starters and five main courses.

This new deal for groups is party of a rolling programme of special coach group initiatives from the Skiddaw Hotel, which also provides a free coach wash service depending on the length of stay.

 For more information about Christmas Party breaks and other deals contact general manager John Miller on 01768 772071.

Wizard tour to Australia

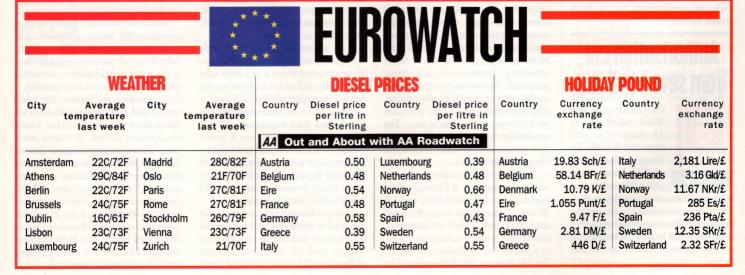

PARRYS International is adding some Winter warmth to its holiday programme by running its third tour to Australia in January.

The 18-day tour departs on Monday 19 January and costs £1,945 per person, excluding insurance and airport taxes. It comprises seven nights in Sydney, three nights in Brisbane and four nights in Cairns. Return flights to Australia are with Singapore Airlines and there is an overnight stop in Singapore on the outward journey. Accommodation is in four or five star hotels on a room only basis.

The West Midlands operator also is running its regular Caribbean cruises in November and March of each year. The next departure is on 15 November and the price is £1,125 per person, exclusive of insurance and port charges. The tariff comprises transfers or Gatwick. Heathrow return flights to Miami and seven nights aboard the Royal Caribbean's Majesty of the Seas.

Last postcard

OPERATORS planning excursions to Holmfirth, the West Yorkshire town that is featured in Last of the Summer Wine, should be advised that the Holmfirth Postcard Museum closed at the end of August for an unspecified period. It is hoped to find another site for the collection as soon as possible.

Licence bid withdrawn

LICENSING

AN OPERATOR banned from holding or obtaining a licence last July withdrew his bid for a fresh licence after West Midland traffic commissioner John Mervyn Pugh said he had no power to hear it.

Dean Ratcliffe, who was seeking to trade in the name of Di's Minibuses, of 85 Torrington Avenue, Tile Hill, Coventry, Warwickshire, was seeking at a Birmingham public inquiry a new two-minibus restricted licence. Mr Ratcliffe was banned from holding or obtaining an O-licence for five years and had his PCV driving licence and O-licence revoked, following his conviction for a serious offence.

For Mr Ratcliffe, Frances Skyte said that, since his PCV driving licence had been returned to him, he had obtained employment with a Coventry coach operator. He also now had a steady girlfriend and was planning to shortly get married.

Mr Pugh pointed out he had no jurisdiction to hear the application as Mr Ratcliffe had not asked for his period of disqualification to be reviewed, something traffic commissioners now had the power to do.

Mr Pugh suggested perhaps Mr Ratcliffe ought to have appealed to the Transport Tribunal against his original decision. Mrs Skyte said he had not appealed as they had considered the decision to have been a fair one in the circumstances of the case.

Mrs Skyte said Mr Ratcliffe would withdraw his application and Mr Pugh said clearly Mr Ratcliffe was rehabilitating himself and, if he continued to do so, he would be prepared to consider reviewing the disqualification period and together with an application for a fresh licence next April.

Authorisation cut from seven to three

IN Coach and Bus Week, week ending 14 August, it was reported that the Olicence authorisation of VG Jarvis Coaches of Aberdare had been cut from seven vehicles to two. This was incorrect. At public inquiry, the licence authorisation was cut from seven to three vehicles, and we apologise unreservedly for this factual error.

Linkline pays the price for poor maintenance record

Two-week suspension for school bus operator

THE poor maintenance record of a school bus operator has led to his Olicence being suspended for two weeks at a Trafford disciplinary inquiry.

Thomas Burton, trading as Linkline Travel, of 386 Gravel Lane, Banks, Southport, Lancashire, had been called before North Western deputy traffic commissioner Patrick Mulvenna because of concerns about his maintenance standards and the incorrect taxation of a vehicle. Mr Burton holds a national three-vehicle O-licence.

DoT vehicle examiner Eric Bober said he had carried out a maintenance investigation in May. The vehicles were parked at Baxter's Farm, some two miles from the declared operating centre. Mr Burton had told him the local authority had required him to move his eight vehicles from Gravel Lane. Two were licensed as PSVs and two as private-hire vehicles, the others being off the road. The vehicles were used for the carriage of school children and for private hire work. He examined two vehicles, both of which he found to be in a potentially dangerous condition with serious brake and tyre faults.

The vehicles were inspected by Mr Burton's CPC holder, Sydney Ashcroft, said Mr Bober. The stated inspection interval was six weeks but there were gaps of up to eight months in the records. The records produced were incomplete and were of the wrong type. The driver-defect reporting system was not being enforced. The vehicles were parked in the open on rough hard standing. The approach road to the premises was in very poor condition. The workshop was old and the inspection pit was deeply water-logged and clogged with rubbish.

Assurances given during a maintenance investigation in February 1996 had not been complied with, said Mr Bober. The vehicles in use were old and required a lot of attention, which they were not receiving.

Questioned by Andrew Woolfall, for Mr Burton, Mr Bober denied he had been told one of the prohibited vehicles was under repair or the other prohibited vehicle was off the road because the test certificate had expired.

Mr Woolfall said the pit had been cleaned out and tidied up, a new type of inspection record was in use and the driver defect reporting system had been revised.

Mr Ashcroft said he acted as Mr Burton's transport manager and he maintained the vehicles with the assistance of a Mr Johnson, who was

DoT examiner

The inspection pit had not been completely waterproofed and it used to weep when there was a high tide. It had been full of sea water when the vehicle examiner visited.

They had now done some sealing work and had repainted the pit. They were hoping to use a warehouse on the site to park the vehicles under cover when it was vacated in the near future. The vehicles were now being brake tested every 12 weeks at the local test station.

The prohibited vehicles were not marked as being out of service as the PSVs were driven by himself, Mr Burton and Mr Johnson, said Mr Ashcroft. The vehicles had been inspected regularly, it was just the paperwork side that had been neglected. It had been a case of not writing things down. They had not fully appreciated the job was not done when they put the tool box

Mr Ashcroft said the vehicle excise duty problem arose after they had removed a 12 seater from PSV work and had taxed it at the lower rate. They subsequently brought it back into the PSV side and in error it was taxed on the renewal notice. He gave an undertaking that any back duty due would be paid.

It was obvious they had all been doing too much, said Mr Ashcroft and, from September, it was planned to employ a full-time fitter. He gave an undertaking to apply for a change of operating centre within seven days.

Mr Burton said he did not have a lot of day-to-day involvement with the business. For the future he would have to go into the office more often to check everything was being done properly. He had not thought to notify the commissioner of the change of operating centre as the postal address had not changed.

In reply to the deputy commissioner, Mr Burton agreed he more or less left everything to Mr Ashcroft. He said he had never understood the paperwork side.

Asked whether he understood his duties as an operator, Mr Burton said he was learning that now.

Financial evidence was heard in private at Mr Burton's request.

Producing references from clients, Mr Woolfall pointed out Mr Burton's vehicles had never received a prohibition notice at the roadside.

Suspending the licence, Mr Mulvenna said there was no doubt in his mind there were grounds for taking disciplinary action. It was a sorry tale. There had been a great deal of laxity in the way the operation had been managed. Unless adequate records were kept, the Vehicle Inspectorate could not be satisfied vehicles were being kept in a roadworthy condition. However, he was heartened by the fact both Mr Burton and Mr Ashcroft now appeared to realise what was required.

drivers. The drivers face 80 charges including driving for 41/2 hours without the required 45 minutes break, taking insufficient daily and weekly rest, failing to keep a record, and, in one instance, driving a class of vehicle when not authorised so to do.

The company, which is accused of permitting the drivers' offences and of 48 offences of failing to produce tachograph records in a prosecution brought by the Vehicle Inspectorate, wanted separate trials for itself and each of the drivers.

For the Vehicle Inspectorate, Beverley Bell argued it was in the interests of justice that the cases should be heard together so the court had the whole picture.

The magistrates adjourned the hearing until mid-September.

Black day for Black Horse Coaches

WORLEY. who trades as Black Horse Coaches, has had her O-licence suspended by West Midland traffic commissioner John Mervyn

Pugh until she produces further financial information to satisfy him she has sufficient financial resources.

The commissioner had already cut the authorisation on the licence held by Mrs Worley, of 198 Blackhorse Road, Longford, Coventry, Warwickshire, from four vehicles to two when he earlier adjourned consideration of what action to take to give Mrs Worley an opportunity of producing financial information (CBW, 5 July).

When the hearing resumed, Michael Carless, for Mrs Worley, said draft accounts produced demonstrated the business was improving and steps had been taken to deliver the figure the commissioner was looking for. The Traffic Area could check with the bank that funding was avail-

Mr Pugh said it was not for him to delve and inquire of bank managers. It was for the operator to satisfy him.

Financial evidence was heard in private at Mrs Worley's request.

Mr Pugh had indicated he proposed suspending the licence until proper audited accounts were produced. Michael Carless, for Mrs Worley, said the suspension of a licence in the psv industry had a devastating

Mr Pugh said he had to consider the industry as a whole. If he was totally soft, as he had been with Mrs Worley, others were going to say: "Why bother, just string him along." Certain standards were required and he had been so lenient in giving Mrs Worley time to produce the required information.

Suspending the licence with effect from midnight that night, Mr Pugh said he hoped it would give Mrs Worley a sufficient jolt as to make her realise these things needed to be done. The suspension would only be lifted when full proper audited accounts were produced, plus a letter from the new bank confirming there was a facility on offer of £2,500 per vehicle and a letter from the old bank confirming no money was owed to them. In addition, he would require the person who had prepared the draft accounts produced to attend on the next occasion as there were a number of items requiring explanation.

Mrs Worley had been given since 6 June to produce the required information, said Mr Pugh and the action he had just taken he should perhaps have taken in June and July. He warned Mrs Worley that, if she was found to be operating, she could expect the immediate revocation of her licence.

Unqualified driver causes O-licence cut

THE employment of an unqualified driver to drive a 16-seater PSV minibus has led to Jennifer Parker's O-licence authorisation being cut from two vehicles to one.

Ms Parker, of 24 Willow Way, Wisbech, Cambridgeshire, trading as Parker's of Wisbech, had been called before Eastern Traffic Commissioner Brigadier Compton Boyd at a Cambridge disciplinary inquiry following her conviction for employing an unqualified driver.

Ms Parker, who holds a restricted licence, claimed she had only been following advice given to her by the Department of Transport.

Make car parking a costly experience few weeks ago I wrote that any consultation on transport provision should be wide ranging - looking at the reasons why people travel and what affects decisions on transport mode. The recentlypublished discussion document Developing an Integrated Transport Policy does indeed do that, and the Government should be commended for grasping this particular nettle which, as it rightly says, will involve the Government and individuals in stark and difficult choices.

There is no easy solution to curbing traffic congestion and pollution therefrom. There may not be a right answer or an absolute cure at all, yet it is an important issue for all of us as operators and individuals and it is, therefore, seemly that we should all be involved in seeking any remedy or

However, despite commendation for effort, I have doubts about the thinking behind the questions posed by this document. Personal experience and study of all recent schemes cries out that, whether carrots or sticks are used, the public is unlikely to stop using cars which they already possess and make a significant number of journeys by public transport. The marginal (ie, running) cost of using a car is still below 10p a mile. This may actually be less than the public transport equivalent and, more to the point, it is seen as well affordable to have the enjoyments and freedoms of personal transport. It is useless telling a car owner that the true costs are more like 45 pence per mile. Once a car is owned it is only the marginal costs that really count.

Developing an Integrated Transport Policy contains the clue to what I think is the real answer. It cites the fact that passenger journeys have decreased across the majority of the country where bus services are deregulated, but increased in (regulated) London. I reject inference in the document, that the increase is because of regulation and the decrease because of deregulation. The decrease is actually slower since deregulation than it was pre-1985 and has, indeed, now levelled out. The true reason for the increase in London is not regulation, but simply the fact that, while it is tiresome to drive in London, the real deterrent to owning or using a car in London is parking it.

That is my point: it is not the cost of owning or using a car that will switch people to public transport, nor is it congestion. The determining factor is what to do with the vehicle when it has to stop, whether for a few seconds, an hour or two, or all day or night.

All that freeing up car spaces on the road by cajoling car users to convert to public transport will achieve is more car users coming in to fill the available space. What I believe is actually needed is a policy that actually reduces car ownership, not just use. My heretical solution, which I have aired in this column before, does, indeed, involve stark and difficult choices, but it is very simple: Over a period of time, ban all garaging of cars on the public highway. It is what happens when cars are stationary that determines ownership and thus public transport use - not the costs or problems that accrue when they are going.

•What is needed is a policy that reduces car ownership, not just use?

As well as reducing the number of cars in possession and thus likely to be used, a tightening up on long-term on-street parking would free up road space for traffic movement which, historically and legally, is the purpose of the highway. It never was free stabling for the horses, nor should it be free garaging for the motor-car.

This consultative paper outlines the case for various changes, extols the need for adequate enforcement but makes the easy-to-anticipate comment that "Resources are strained [and] it will be necessary to balance the competing calls on Government expenditure." I beg to differ.

Here we have a radical review, promoted by a new, large and powerful Department (Environment, Transport and the Regions). Is it not high time for a really radical re-think about transport financing? Is there a single good reason (apart from the inherent desire of the Treasury to keep its hands on the entire purse strings of the State - and I am not sure that this is a good reason) why the DoTER should not be wholly responsible for its own budget? Yes, I do mean what you think. That this super department should keep all the revenues from VED, fuel duty, operator and driver licensing and all other fees and duties collected from the motorist and the transport industries, and directly use the revenue to provide the infrastructure and support required to make the transport system workable.

All the figures I have seen over the years suggest that, if this course was followed, far from there being a shortage of funding for whatever needed to be done as a result of this review, there would be a mega-gigantic surplus.

It is surely a manifest injustice to charge and tax all road users, partly as a source of general Treasury funds and partly as an actual deterrent to road use (as evidenced in above-RPI fuel duty increases in recent Budgets) and then plead poverty when cash is needed to make the transport arrangements of the nation more efficient.

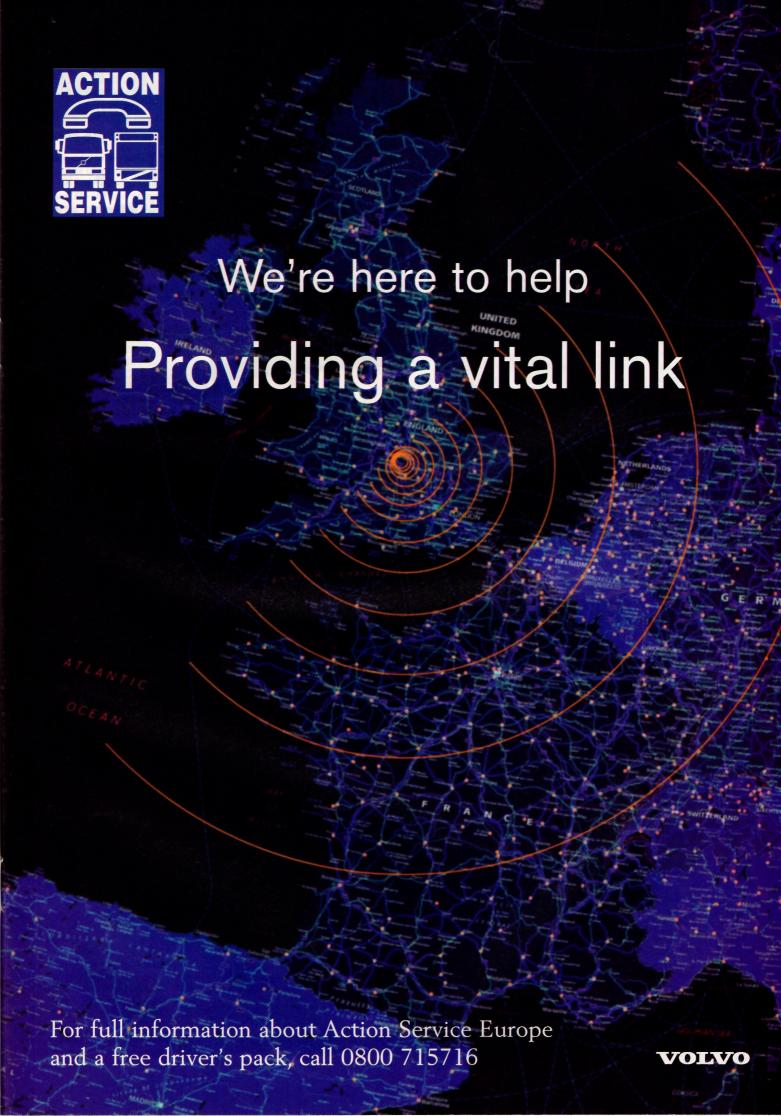

Which leads to another of my concerns about this consultation paper: it repeats the tired statistic that fares under deregulation have increased faster than infla-Hardly surprising when Governments of both colour have inflicted increases way above RPI on a major cost item - fuel. Here's another stark choice for the Government and passengers: do you want old vehicles, with high floors and low emission quality, or has the industry correctly heard the call for new lowfloor buses with (less economical) Euro 2 emission standard engines - not to mention incidentals like enhanced destination displays, air conditioning, DPTAC features and drivers oozing customer care. The stark and difficult economic fact of life is that these are all extra costs and, without Government aid, the only way these enhancements can be paid for is via the fare box.

Surprisingly, this document ignores the role of the coach. This is a wide-ranging review supposedly covering all forms of transport by land and water including cycling and even walking, yet I do not think the word 'coach' appears at all. The contribution commuter coaches make to its apparent objectives are not acknowledged, far less any suggestion that they (and other express services) could have an even greater role in reducing congestion and pollution.

I end with another positive suggestion to reduce car dependence: that the distances which a child can reasonably be expected to walk to school as we approach 2000 should be reviewed. What was normal, practicable and acceptable when the Education Act 1944 was passed is at odds with contemporary reality - as witnessed by the profusion of parents' cars outside every school in the land. We should be gunning for this with all our might, notwithstanding our Hello, who's on the bus?

THAT doyen of sycophancy, Hello! magazine, has turned to buses to make a point about its rival. The toadying trophy room of the rich has had its nose put out of joint by OK!, which also sucks up to the famous although, Hello! claims, not the REALLY famous.

Hence a decker cleverly liveried by transport ad specialist TDI to make it look as if every seat has been taken by the likes of Ivana Trump et al, whose chief claim to fame is being famous.

The slogan goes along the lines of "Why settle for lookalikes when you can have the real thing?" and, to rub salt in the wound, Hello! has had the bus parked outside the OK! offices.

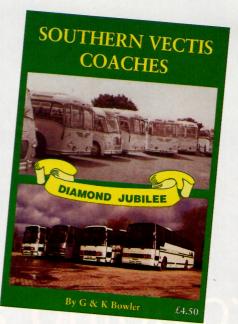

The vehicle's set of passengers are, mercifully, more silent than the real thing, giving trainee drivers who will be using the vehicle when off duty an easy introduction to the real thing and a fund of stories which begin: "You'll never guess who I had on my bus the other day...

Watch out for stowaways and vehicle examiners

THE word 'stowaway' conjures up visions of raggedtrousered boys hiding in ship's holds.

No longer. Modern stowaways are often economic or political refugees who clamber into the most unlikely gaps to reach Britain.

Ask Eurostar, recently discovered four Russians nestling under an inspection hatch on the Chunnel train.

Staff were alerted by a tapping sound from under the vehicle (in the bus industry, a sign that a VI examiner is at work) and the men were arrested at Ashford. In an earlier incident, a stowaway wasn't discovered until the train reached Waterloo.

Which makes one wonder how long it will be before a stowaway will be found hitching a ride in a coach. After all, they're a popular place for hiding

The lockers are the obvious place but it seems that cramming under an inspection hatch is not out of the

Incredibly, and widely reported, Asians have stowed away in the front wheel compartment under 747 jets, braving sub-zero temperatures in the process and occasionally falling out, frozen solid, when the wheels go down over the airport.

VI aims to help operators

Your recent editorial touched again on 'S' markings (CBW, 9 August) suggesting that some operators are unaware of the meaning of the 'S' endorsement.

To counter this, and other misunderstandings about prohibitions and related notices, we are planning to run a series of seminars in the Autumn. As well as explaining the standards applied by vehicle examiners, they will run through the procedures for issuing a prohibition and getting it cleared, and explain the significance of all the markings on the form. Attendance at these seminars should improve operators' understanding of the actions of vehicle examiners, particularly when a prohibition is issued.

We will be coming out with details of the dates of these seminars in September.

Understanding will be further aided by the roll-out of our information systems strategy, as the computer-produced PG9s will then spell out that a defect was considered to be due to a significant failure in maintenance arrangements, rather than simply use the 'S' annotation.

Letter of the Week

I was talking about improving services

I was amused to read the letter from Rosemary Sharples (CBW, 14 August) commenting on mine of a few weeks ago and the typical refusal to appreciate the true picture of bus travel. My comments were based on a belief of a better way to operate public transport services, not a criticism of bike users

I used to own a bike, although admittedly do not do so now, and can confirm that mine was dirty and certainly rattled! I would not like to travel with that, and certainly not someone else's, vibrating behind my ear all the time. After it has been ridden, which is the point of taking it on the bus in the first place, if it has been raining, no matter how fussy Rosemary is, it is bound to be dirty.

My comment was actually referring to the criticism of praising up Continental designs at the expense of British ones. The idea recently photographed in the magazine of the Bristol VR double decker with an outside bike rack, where they would not cause offence to the majority of the bus passengers, seems to me to be a far better option for the majority of the users and provides travel opportunities more akin to a car. Obviously a separate covered compartment would be the best option but it is unlikely that bike riders would want to pay the full cost that the provision of one would cost. The majority of bikes carried on the backs of cars are in fresh air.

As a second point, Rosemary then goes on to suggest that I might propose that there should be a dress code. While, I am quite capable of coming up with ideas of my own perhaps this is not as outrageous as it first sounds. I am sure there are many regular passengers and drivers who would at times welcome this, particularly when forced to sit next to someone who has not washed or is drunk. Anyone who is a regular passenger will know this happens, even if it is not politically correct to say so (ask Steven Norris).

The PCC car - a brave effort to save the form of transport that helped change urban America

A streetcar to desire

HE PCC CAR was America's most technically-advanced pre-war streetcar. It was a brave effort to save the form of public transport that helped change urban America, creating access to suburbs and amusement parks, but which was fast being eclipsed by private cars and buses. Between 1922 and 1932, streetcar mileage almost halved. But, in a final attempt to change history, 25 major streetcar operators and most of their suppliers formed the Electric Railway Presidents' Conference Committee - Presidents' Conference Committee (PCC) for short - in 1929. They set themselves the task of producing a streetcar with the speed and performance of a private car and the operating economy of a bus.

The committee poured over $1 million into the project – against the economic background of the Great Depression – and recruited a chief engineer from outside the industry so it wouldn't be hidebound by past practice.

Market research established how much acceleration passengers would tolerate. The streamlined single-ended prototype, unveiled in 1934, offered such advances as air-operated folding doors. Underneath, rubber components made it uncannily quiet.

In 1936, the first 100 went to New York's Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Corporation which also took the prototype; around 5,000 were delivered across North America before production ended in the early-1950s.

Most were built either by the St Louis Car Company or Pullman, with Westinghouse or General Electric equipment.

But the PCC car didn't save many streetcar systems. It was no match for National City Lines, a company part owned by General Motors and some oil and rubber companies and which was formed around the same time as the PCC.

By 1950, NCL had bought up and closed down over 100 cities' streetcar systems, replacing them with buses.

It got its comeuppance when it was convicted of engaging in a criminal conspiracy, but that was too late to save more than about 10 systems.

PCC cars – many bought from the closed systems – kept most of them going until new cars could be bought in more recent years, while others were exported to Europe. Largely through the efforts of Belgian manufacturer La Brugeoise, brand new Europeanised PCCs joined many Continental tramways.

And thanks to a licensing deal arranged in 1947, the huge Tatra works in Prague, and some associated factories, supplied Iron Curtain countries with huge fleets of updated PCC trams from 1951 onwards; many still run today.

Eavesway: a real

Mark Williams catches up with a fast-moving company that's gone from small and friendly, to small, friendly, modern, and the subject of one of Corgi's famous miniatures

T'S a kind of home truth that any company whose vehicles have made it into the Corgi Classics collection has truly arrived. Mike Eaves got The Call some time ago from Corgi, asking if he would mind having his well-known Van Hool Alizees immortalised in zinc and, within a very short time, got his next 10 fleet additions through the post. Much-deserved they are too, because in so many senses, Eavesway is a model operator...

Every company would claim, of course, to have come along in leaps and bounds but Eavesway directors Ernie Eaves, son Mike, and fellow director Phil Rogers can justifiably claim to have come along in a single leap and a bound, having just transformed a company which was already very smart into one which is also very modern, in a matter of six months. It has cost £250,000 or more, but the result should keep Eavesway somewhere near the top of the quality league for some time to come.

I first met Mike Eaves some years ago, on a familiarisation trip on which one of his immaculate Van Hools was being used to convey real experts - other coach operators. At the time, one of the talking points was how he had let his sense of humour get the better of him, and emblazoned his vehicles with the now-familiar 'Viaggi Eavesway', 'Eavesway Reisen' and other European-flavoured names to reflect his tour programme.

Eavesway was not a big company but, in the opinion of its fellow operators, it was a good company, with quality vehicles, selling quality products at sensible prices. And so it has continued in the intervening years, steadily building trade that's based on trust, until such point when it was felt it had outgrown its site on the Wigan Road, in Ashton-in-Makerfield, perhaps not physically but certainly organically.

Eavesway now has a smart new depot, new offices, new staff and a new, networked computer system. Fortunately for its customers, it has the same old-fashioned approach to business.

'The fact is, we have enjoyed running this company more than ever in the last two years," said Mike over a coffee. "As directors, we all have the same ambition and, now that we are no longer operating a garage and travel agency, we are all pulling in the same direction. The challenge we face is to make Eavesway more than the accepted face of coaching...

The basic plan has been to specialise in the upper end of the coach market, with a broad span of work, but all using high-spec 49 seaters: "Having a mixed fleet caused us problems in the early days,' said Phil Rogers. "Having a common standard helps you deliver what the customer expects, no matter which coach you use.

In 1987, Eavesway had only Plaxtons and Duples, many of which were 'standard' vehicles on school work. The change at that point to DAF/Van Hool was, in Mike Eaves' opinion, a turning point for the business, although it meant placing its fleet purchases in the hands of Hughes DAF: "It had some dealers tearing their hair out trying to sell to "The idea was to get a single image across, never using words like 'executive' or shouting about the coach's features, but delivering one standard. The down side is that, if you specialise, you must get everything absolutely right.

"The same is true when we subcontract other operators. We use only five or six regularly, because it's imperative we maintain the same quality for all

This rigid adherence to a single quality, come rain, shine or recession, looked like commercial suicide

Then and now: Eavesway totally transformed a when money was short six years ago: "But when the economy was on the slide, we just kept plugging away," said Mike Eaves.

"The result was we were ready for quality business when it returned. It picked up much quicker for us because we had the vehicles to do the work."

For three years, the standard purchase has been a Van Hool Alizee 49 with toilet, air conditioning, fridge and seatbelts. Standard, that is, apart from the super-spec coaches used for Everton Football Club - a relationship which has endured for 26 years - and used for Bolton Wanderers, Tranmere Rovers and Chester City. These double up for corporate work, which is growing despite Eavesway's remoteness from London airports. Manchester Airport provides some business, though.

Work with P&O cruise passengers first presented itself five years ago, and has shown steady growth to the extent that Eavesway now runs a north-east corridor from Newcastle to the ships, and from Glasgow in the north-west.

"It was the cruise work which persuaded us to hire an EOS 90, which impressed us so much we subsequently bought it," said Mike Eaves. "We were very, very pleased with it, and bought another last year. It looks modern, and helps make clients realise that we have a new vehicle or two.'

New vehicles aren't enough if it's image you are after, though. Eavesway started looking for a new base at the start of 1995, and spent 18 months at it until, last Summer, it came across a haulage company in receivership, and a superb, £0.5 million site for sale freehold. There was no hesitation.

model operation

run-down haulage yard into a depot which positively beckons visitors to drop in. It has five computer terminals and a new accounts department

"I saw the place on my way home one day," said Mike Eaves. "We'd completed by October, got the builders in during November and, for six months, the place was like the battle of the Somme.

Problems included serious oil contamination and a planning authority which wanted the same building foundations. Using a local company, Eavesway achieved a transformation in appearance, then set about transforming the way it did its business when it moved in.

Five computer terminals, software from Distinctive Systems and a new accounts department were installed in the open-plan office, and Eavesway worked overtime to get everything up and running: "I'm very happy with the way it's gone," said Mike Eaves. "It was only after installing the system that we realised we couldn't have done anything like as well manually. We got it in the nick of time. Reservations, accounts and private hire are being installed on the system."

Necessity comes in the form of increasing diversity and turnover, which will rise from £1.13 million last year to £1.4 million this year. And it will rise still further if tours manager Joe Chapman - another new addition to the Eavesway set-up - manages to fill the gaps in what is already a colourful wall planner. Mr Chapman's sole duty is to set up tours and excursions... business Eavesway cut back on three years ago due to low rates.

"We sell through travel agents and direct mail, plus brochuring on our coaches," said Mr Chapman, whose client list also includes around 20 schools. "It has all been repeat business in the past, but I'm working on packaged deals to sell by the seat to schools, and targeting company social clubs.'

"It's cyclical business," says Mike Eaves. "We think the time is now right to have another go. A lot of regulars will be pleased with the extra choice."

All of which has left Mike Eaves aware of a yawning gap in Eavesway's working practice: "We haven't done any sales and marketing in the last 10 years," he admitted. "That's something we intend to tackle now. The results might disappoint us or frighten us to death, but we realise this must become an essential part of the working day if we are going to achieve our plans."

"I had this phone call one day," Mike Eaves told me just before I left for home. "This guy just said 'Is that Eavesway?' and when I said it was, went quiet. I asked him what he wanted.

'Nothing, he said, then explained that he'd just bought a Corgi model, saw the legal lettering on the side of the model, and wondered whether the phone number was right. When I thought about it, none of the detail was supplied by us, but the model even includes registration plate decals for all our Van Hools, and the right football club insignia. We're more famous than thought."

Phil Rogers, Mike and Ernie Eaves: three-pronged management approach

Air-con EuroRider for s

AW GROUP

HUSBAND and wife team Mike and Linda Maney succumbed once more to the charms of Alan Wilson, and bought this Beulas-bodied Iveco EuroRider. The St Albans operator, which trades as Shire Coaches, started up six years ago with a £4,000 second-hand coach from Mr Wilson, and has put most of its business with him ever since: "At one time, every vehicle in the fleet came from Alan," said Mrs Maney.

The EuroRider was bought exstock from AW Group already specified with 51 seats and all the usual Iveco luxuries including air conditioning and toilet. It is being used, remarkably, on Shire's extensive school tour work and on rapidlybuilding private hire.

"Having newer vehicles has attracted a lot of attention to our fleet," said Mrs Maney. "As a result, the private hire has grown of its own accord.

"It's a lovely coach, though we have no particular preferences here. The fleet includes an Algarve, Jonckheere, Berkhof and Plaxton 4000."

There are also two UVG Unistars used for schools contracts and excursion work, a minibus and even a motorhome: "We also charter a 12-berth sailing yacht moored at Lymington," said Mrs Maney.

Busy road ahead for Johnson's new Scania

SCANIA

A BURGEONING tours programme and demand for top quality has persuaded Johnson Brothers Tours to buy this Scania Van Hool Alizee.

The 49-seater has air conditioning plus the usual refinements expected of a top-flight tourer, including video, TV and toilet. And its seats are the last word in comfort.

"We specified Van Hool Royal Class seating, which has the same body-hugging style as a Recaro," said Lee Johnson, director of the company. "The vehicle has already been on a Norway tour and is about to go to Italy. So far, customer reaction has been excellent."

Another 'first' for Johnson is the low driver position, which gives unequalled views for passengers and is liked by some drivers, too. What's not so unusual for Johnson's is a blank rear panel.

"It's good for advertising space and, in any case, who looks out of the rear window?" said Mr Johnson. "This time, we've used reflective lettering which helps draw attention to the company."

As with many Johnson's vehicles, the roof carries air horns and the bodywork uses a large number of marker lights. It joins a fleet of 20 tourers and 30 other coaches, all very busy, says Mr Johnson.

"Average tour loading on our own programme is something like 40, which we are very pleased with," he said. "The occasional tour goes out with 15 on it, but we always try to make sure the tour goes anyway, even if there's no profit. Cancellations are very bad for business."

Johnson's is expecting to expand significantly in the next 12 months, and is poised to make exstock purchase of three more vehicles in the next fortnight. Such is demand, that an ex-stock Irizar Century tri-axle bought recently is still in delivery white, and will remain like that until January when there is enough slack to send it to Spain for paintwork.

 Johnson's new Optimo IV, still in the factory, is expected to be one of Caetano's exhibits at this year's Coach and Bus 97, held 9 to 11 October at the NEC.

Scarlet Band is a cool operator

MOSELEY PCV

COUNTY Durham operator Scarlet Band Coaches is completing this year's Summer season with an airconditioned treat for its regular tour passengers. This Bova Futura FHD, the first new vehicle for the firm for five years, has 49 seats, toilet and fridge, and has been specified with a blank rear end to provide the ultimate advertising hoarding.

It joins four touring coaches and a dozen local service vehicles in a fleet which has been going for around 70 years. Though the touring fleet has been centred on Volvo in recent years, Scarlet Band is no stranger to Bova, having been one of the first in the queue for the Futura in 1984 when it was launched.

Owner Arthur Blenkinsop said: "Back then, we had to do our own modifications on the vehicle to meet our demands, but this new vehicle needed no work. It's a lovely coach quiet and smooth, with a muchimproved interior."

HOWIES Holidays of West Yorkshire added its tasteful mauve and cream livery to this second-hand Bova Futura FHD, bought from Moseley PCV. The air-conditioned 49-seater with toilet has had a complete refurbishment for tour work, and marks 10 years of trading for the Roberttown operator.

Failure to replace weak brake shoe return springs means you could be...

Brake return springs should be replaced at every re-lining, says Don

Penny wise nd foolis

WEAK brake shoe return springs could be costing the industry thousands in maintenance and could increase the accident rate, says a brake manufacturer.

Manchester-based Don, in its continuing campaign for better workshop practice, says replacement return springs cost pence, but a dragging shoe not only wears more quickly but can cause brake fade and overheat drums.

"Weak return springs can cause the bottom shoe - usually the leading shoe - in an S-cam brake to hang down to the point where the shoe is constantly touching the drum, building up heat and reducing braking output by up to 25 per cent," said technical engineer Andrew Blair.

"In the worst-case scenario, the leading shoe can drag then, when the brake is applied, output is well below the correct level until enough wear has occurred on the trailing shoe to theoretically return it to full contact. In practice, this rarely happens but there is a significant impact on lining life and cost."

Don says brake return springs should be replaced at every re-lining. ■ Don, part of BBA Friction, is on 0161 205 2371, fax 0161 205

can evaluate bus ads effectivenes Computer program

BUS advertising outside of London has often been tricky to sell because buyers are not confident their adverts get seen.

Now, 3M has come up with a computer program which uses analysis of British and European government statistics to calculate the number and type of people who see coaches and buses, route by route.

"Until now, no such information has been available for vehicles - a more complex problem for the statisticians because of the vehicle's mobility," says 3M.

'As a result, companies that have made use of vehicle advertising have done so as an act of faith, and without hard evidence of its effectiveness."

Using the programme, bus companies can demonstrate not only the socio-economic group of people who will see advertisements, but calculate their purchasing power... both of which are useful details to ensure the advertising is relevant and effective.

We would like to pay back your loyalty to CBW by offering free advertising on a points based system, in other words the more advertising you do, the more points we will give you, the more points you get, the more free advertising we will give you.

Every time you book an advert in the classified section, the sales team will automatically convert the value of the advert into points, and a can instantly tell you how many points you have earned and what free advertising you are entitled to.

Below are the points you will receive for £'s spent on classified advertising:

up to £35 up to £100 over £100

Receive

2 points 3 points

Once your points start to build up, you can trade them in for free advertising.

Here's what your points will get you:

Lineage Highlighted Lineage 4 x 1 box 6 x 2 box 13 x 2 (quarter) 13 x 4 (half)

6 points 2 points 30 points 75 points 100 points

If you want a size that is not listed above, your salesperson will tell you how many points you need to submit.

We look forward to doing business with you

Constantly bringing you

Met coach advisory service's Ian Fray not to be replaced

SERGEANT IAN FRAY, who runs the Metropolitan Police Coach Advisory Service, is to retire this month, and will not be replaced.

He took over from Bob Pilbeam, who has since worked for CPT and as a London guide. Sergeant Fray immediately made the role his own, bringing a great deal of humour to his regular newsletters.

His main function was to coordinate information relevant to scheduled, express and touring coach traffic, such as traffic disruption caused by marches and roadworks. He was jointly responsible for producing the coach-parking map of London, which both Sergeant Fray and the London Tourist Board distributed. "I am disappointed and saddened that the Metropolitan Police is not to continue the post but it is a casualty of a much larger plan for restructuring," said Sergeant Fray who, having served 30 years in the force, is to spend his time and pension on his passion for

Eavesway's chief of tours and marketing

ASHTON-IN-MAKER-FIELD-based Eavesway has appointed Joe Chapman tours and marketing manager (see feature, this issue).

Mr Chapman, 48, started his career in coaching in 1973 as a driver/guide for Shearings, then took his skills to Glenton Tours.

After a short break outside of the industry in sales and marketing, he returned as tours director for Trafal-

He left Trafalgar in 1995 for personal reasons, and freelanced in the industry in a variety of marketing functions before joining Eavesway at its new depot.

Mr Chapman is based in Wrexham, and is married with three children.
